

OPINION ARTICLE

The text talks about why religion has stopped having so many followers and one of the ideas that is commented is that there is currently a lot of migration, which means that there are people from many different parts of the world in the same country, each one comes with their beliefs from their countries and therefore the number of believers in the countries decreases.

We agree with this because if people who migrate to other countries do not change their beliefs, new religions are implemented in the cities, making them more multicultural.

We do not believe that it is a bad thing because countries can be culturally enriched. People from their own country can learn from other cultures and follow the one that interests them the most.

Furthermore, the article spells out that the English Church has to trust that God will build his kingdom on Earth and will make Christ known. The Church does not want to lose followers and would do its best to create and have that community.

Nevertheless, humanists and secularists reconsider the objective that the Church has due to the loss of followers.

From our point of view, we agree that every person and community would do anything to reach their objectives. But they should take into account what is happening around them. They should adapt their goals to their reality, like that they would be more likely to be achieved.

For instance, it is irrefutable that the Church will keep trying to seek followers, but they should do it in a way that is attractive nowadays. When the Church does not do that it is when people start to reconsider their role.

So, it is known that the Church will keep doing its role because it is in what they believe but they also have to accept that the circumstances they live now will make their aim more difficult to be realized.

In addition, the article puts emphasis in the multi religious country where the English are currently living, and this is due to the different cultures and ethics United Kingdom, specially London, include.

That's the reason why Christianity covers so little percentage in the amount of religions, because this country is known for its diversity and inclusion.

This is something that we believe that should be applied in our countries, mainly in the developed ones, because we must be the pioneers in this movement. In Spain, for example, we are very distant when it comes to welcoming new people from the world abroad, in contrast with the United Kingdom. So, the question is, is it so difficult to behave as human beings?
